Question (s)
How does it feel for a whole country to be against the entire religious group? Then and 20 years later? Who is the actual enemy here, the attackers of the entire religious group?

Terrorism:
Violent attacks were a product of establishing psychological fear, “one of the primary goals is to intimidate their target publics and force the government to react and often overreact” (Nacos, Elkon, Shapiro, 106).

9/11: (Background)
The twin towers were one of the tallest buildings in New York where international trade took place. Attacking those buildings was a message to the united states international relations.

Analysis:
Religion: Unfitting and imprecise use of language has trapped some Muslim. Their words have been twisted around to translate their religious views as solicitations to a cult.

Many analyze the situation as the attackers trying to gain news media access. “Their idea was that terrorists’ strikes would drive fear into targeted societies and make them amenable to the revolutionary change they sought ” (Nacos, Elkon, Shapiro, 107).

Observing the news outlets, it was seen that both entertainment and news media have always paid extraordinary attention to violence regardless of whether in the form of crimes or acts of terrorism.

Research Findings:
- Outsiders view the Muslim world as chaotic violent and unstable therefore depicting an image on the rest of their population as having the same characteristics.
- 63% of Americans did not stop news coverage on terrorist's attack.
- Post 9/11 young Muslims are at high risk of suicide, hate crimes rose to 91%.
- Many Muslim Americans have agreed “since 9/11, nothing has been the same”
- Islamophobia: “Prejudice against Islam or Muslims specially as a political force” (Malik, 219).
- The actual enemy here has been the media. They slowly created the foundation for societal discrimination and racism in America.
